

QT #27: Water captures magnetic memory of the sun rays

Reductionism will never illuminate the beauty of nature. This is why water has hidden the secrets of life for so long. The answers to what life can do are buried in the collisions of sunlight in water. Aristotle once said, “the whole is more than the sum of its parts”. This is essentially the best definition of the disadvantage of the theory of scientific reductionism I can muster of the top of my head.
